

I loved both the practical and the academic aspects of the sessions.

I will apply what I have learned by not being bullied into mediocrity

Is what we offer children the best it could be?

The conference really made me think about what a first hand experience is really like.

What will stick in my memory is Mary Jane's thoughtful and challenging contributions.

The links between the workshops were meaningful and complementary. They all gave us ideas for enriching children's learning experience as well as challenging our thinking, linking learning across the curriculum They were all stimulating and good fun.

The whole idea of what matters to children is seeing learning from the child's perspective, eyes, mind and providing a rich 'diet' for learning which enables them to explore fundamental natural materials, processes, social contexts, first hand with the support of adults who understand what they need, when and how.

The wow factor! Fun, enjoyment - a wonderful experience.

Wow!
I can't thank you all enough.

Linking this approach to other frameworks (including Birth to Three Matters, the Foundation Stage Curriculum Guidance, the National Curriculum, National Primary Strategy) will enable us to feel confident that we are providing what children need to learn actively and meaningfully, whilst still justifying the requirements of the above.

The conference made me think about life, thinking, children, teaching.

What will stick in my memory is the whole experience. It has been an honour to be part of it.

I recommend the What Matters to Children team get the government to adopt What Matters to Children as the curriculum!

The whole idea of What Matters to Children should be at the heart of the curriculum.

It's really made me think about listening to children more.

What will stick in my memory is the magic of Eden; the camaraderie of like-minded people who do not always agree but are prepared to discuss options.

It made me ask myself, 'Am I taking it for granted that I offer time, space, resources?'

Annabelle Dixon would have been so proud.

The conference as a whole made me think about real children and
.. . .

It was all so slick, well executed and thought provoking. How could it improve?
